KEEPING UP HIGHWAYS

Government Bureau's Sound Advice on Road Drainage.

REMOVE ALL WATER QUICKLY.

That on Surface and Underground as Well—Center of Highway Should Be Raised—Size of Tiles and Laying Them Matters of Importance.

The United States office of public roads in Washington sent out the following bulletin regarding the proper manner of road drainage:

With an average of 27,000 tons of water falling in the form of rain on each mile of public road in the United States annually, it is scarcely to be marveled at that the ten commandments of the road builder can be summed up succinctly in the word "drainage." The saying has truth for a basis, as good drainage is the primary requisite for all roads. Even in "good roads" this holds true, for there "good drainage" means such as will safely remove the storm water without erosion or bulging and still retains the surface moisture.

To obtain good drainage one must take into consideration both the surface water and the underground water. The surface water must be removed quickly and completely and without subjecting the road to excessive scour or erosion. For this reason the center of the road should be raised, and the slope toward the side ditches should be from one-half to one inch to each foot distance, so that the water will run freely to the side ditches and not flow down the road or remain in puddles on the roadway.
The side ditches should be of ample size to care for the severest storms, with a fall of not less than six inches to each hundred feet. Frequent and ample cross drains should be constructed and every opportunity taken to get the water away from the road as quickly as possible. Any road along which run surface water standing in the side ditches or on which puddles of water have collected or which has been badly gulled and eroded by the rains has poor drainage and is in need of immediate attention. In fact, earth roads nearly always require a little attention after each rain.

The split log drag is essentially a tool to maintain good drainage on our

A ROAD THAT DRAINAGE WOULD IMPROVE. earth roads should be used after each rain. On a heavy clay or gumbo soil the drag when properly used tends to puddle the road surface, keep it free from ruts, dense, smooth and hard, thus securing the best surface drainage possible.

But in many places the underground water is too near the surface and must be removed before a good road will be possible. This means that some form of subdrainage must be resorted to, usually tile drains or clay or concrete. Water from whatever source must be got rid of effectively.
As water in freezing expands one-eighth its volume, the road heaves out of shape, and when the ice melts the road disappears beneath the rising tide of mud constantly fed by rains, melting snows and underground springs.

In seepy and boggy places the sub-drainage in order to be fully effective should lower the water level to not less than three feet below the road surface. If tiles are used they should be carefully laid, true to grade. Most failures in the drainage can be attributed to carelessness in laying or too flat grade. The less than four inches in diameter should rarely be used, nor should a grade of less than six inches to the hundred feet be used unless absolutely necessary. In a very dense soil it is always advisable to cover the tile to at least a depth of six to twelve inches with a coarse sand or fine gravel. Care should always be taken to procure a free outlet for the drains and to protect the outlet with a concrete bulkhead or catch basin, which can always be kept clean and the outlet free.

The kind of tile to be used depends on local conditions. Concrete tile if properly made is quite as good as clay tile. Which kind to use is entirely a local question of dollars and cents. If concrete tile can be made more cheaply than clay tile can be had, use concrete; if not, use clay tile.

Convict Labor in Building of Roads.

At a recent meeting of the national good roads board, held in New York city, Senator C. T. Lissiter of Virginia outlined the method of building roads with convicts in the Old Dominion.
C. Gordon Neff, the chairman of the board, has decided to make a canvass of the entire United States to find out which states employ convicts in the building of roads. This will be followed up later with an effort to get other states to use convict labor in road building. There is a general movement to abolish convict labor in lines of the industry where it interferes with organized labor, but in no section of the country does organized labor object to the use of convicts in the building of good roads.
